The Open Window School.

The Open Window School. During the past winter all the pubile schools of Middletown have been conducted as open-window schools. Mr. W. A. Wheatley, superintendent there writes, that having known for some years of the good results obtained in outdoor schools for sickly children, he wished from the first to modify and apply the principle to normal children, but Dr. W. W. Roach's account of an open-window experiment in Philadelphia and Dr. Heisn C. Putnerm's book "School Janitors, Mothers nam's book, "School Janitors, Mothers and Health," were the immediate cause of trying the open-window school in Middletown. The schools include 33 graded rooms, accommodating about

Until quite recently sanitary au-thorities had unbounded confidence in heating and ventilating systems which were supposed to supply proper air for forty-five or more children in a room and this without assistance from open windows. It was also supposed that a temperature of from 58 to 70 degrees was about ideal. As for the moisture in the air or lack of it, the shrinking and cracking of woodwork in the room was noticed, but no thought was given to the effect of this dry air upon the mucous lining of the nostrils and throats of the pu-

Many recent investigations have proved beyond any doubt that the latest and best ventilating systems unassisted cannot and no not supply sufficient fresh air for even thirty-five children in a fair-sized school room, and that unless the open windows are used freely or an expensive humidify-

LOSS OF APPETITE

IN THE SPRING

Loss of appetite is accompanied by loss of vitality, vigor or tone, which is a more serious loss. It is common in the spring because at this time the blood is impure and impoverished and falls to give the digestive organs what they need for the proper performance of their functions.
